

The State Fair Whistling to Keep up its Courage.

The State Fair Association may very well be grateful for a rainy spell of weather to "save its face" in connection with the selling of liquor on the grounds. There have been conflicting reports as to the attendance at the fair, and the impression is diligently sought to be made that had it not been for the bad weather the attendance would have surpassed that of other years. This is more or less speculative, and we feel that we have as strong reason for saying that if the rain had not interfered there would have been very little difference in the attendance-as now claimed. We have no doubt that the State Fair Association made unusual efforts, both publicly and privately, to rally every possible person favoring the policy of the liquor license to help them save the day and make it appear that the "people" did not object to the sale of liquor.

The League has never uttered one word of boycott against the State Fair; we felt that that was a matter of individual opinion and to be determined accordingly, and also by such religious and other bodies as might be disposed to take such action. We cannot help believing that President Wilson might have attended the State Fair had it not been for the representation made with reference to the reprehensible conduct of those who were directly responsible for the sale of liquor in defiance of a very large and undeniable public sentiment against it. And while we fully believe that children ought to have every possible advantage in learning all that they can about everything of interest in our State, we also believe that it was a great inconsistency on the part of the State Fair to make a special occasion in the interest of the children and at the same time conduct an institution with several branches which can exist and make money only as it destroys humanity. And we have it from good authority that the scene on the grandstand, where the main bar was located, were probably more disgraceful than last year; and gentlemen who had attended many of the fairs at Richmond said he saw more drunkenness than usual.—The Virginian Issue.

Inviting The Birds.

It is not too early to begin to prepare for attracting the birds about our homes this winter. Almost any form of a feeding table placed high enough from the ground will answer. Even a place in the yard where food is regularly scattered will bring them. Sometimes this feeding place may be on a piazza where the birds can be seen through a window. Hang a piece of suet in a tree near the house. Tie a meat bone where it can be reached. To many it is a constant delight, day after day, to watch these little visitors come and go. If you have never given yourself this pleasure now is the very time to begin. F. H. R.—Our Dumt Animals.

The Sabbath Day.

Sweet memories cluster 'round thy hallowed hours; Memories of mother, father, of bright Easter flowers. The evening, peaceful and quiet, steals upon us As the sun sinks to his place. God's holy word is read; our souls, For the night, committed to His keeping, Through His grace. Sweet childhood memories! Grandmother, with her cap-of-lace, Sitting by the low window, her accustomed place, Meditating upon His promises. Such promises! Shall His law prevail? If so, we shall approach our final place, And shall not quail. Sweet, holy Sabbath! Shall we keep thee free from desecration— Shall we, as men—shall we, as a nation? Or shall we mar God's holy day? Or shall we, for paltry pay, or partly pleasure, Ignore God's law, and from Him thus lightly Our soul's connection sever? Sweet Sabbath day, By all our sacred memories hallowed, May each of us by every act uphold thee! Thy law yet lives. The sons of men so need thy rest! Let us observe thee, and thus In life, in death, in blest. Frank Alexander. Toms Creek, Va.

FOLEY KIDNEY PILLS FOR BACKACHE KIDNEYS AND BLADDER

A Lesson to Merchants.

Clifton Forge Review.

A Staunton paper states that on one day recently 13 pairs of shoes were delivered by one rural mail carrier to parties living along his route. It figured that the Chicago merchant had to pay more rent, more license, more clerk hire, more water rent, more cost for local delivery and more postage on each pair of shoes than it would have cost for local delivery and more postage on each pair of shoes than it would have cost the Staunton merchant. To do this it is a well known fact that the Chicago merchant must furnish inferior goods to be able to compete with the local merchant except for one thing.

It is strange, too, that this one thing is the hardest of all to make the local merchant understand. It is that advertising is what took those 13 orders to Chicago. It may have been done by circulars, by catalogue, by magazine or by newspaper advertising, but it was advertising of some sort that brought the business. The local merchants were probably known to everyone of the 13 families into which those shoes went, while but for advertising the Chicago merchant would not have been heard of. The reason they did not sell the goods was because these 13 families did not have called to their attention just what these local merchants had to sell, while the Chicago merchants went six hundred miles to inform them of what they had. By judicious local advertising in local papers the Staunton merchants could have saved probably ten of these orders and kept that much money at home. There is a lesson in this for Clifton Forge merchants. Hundreds and hundreds of orders go out of town which the local merchants could and would supply at the same or a less price, but the people don't know it. The day of waiting for trade has passed and the merchant who now piles up his bank account is one who continually (not occasionally) lets the public know what he has to sell, and the prices he is willing to take.

GETTING A DRINK IN KANSAS.

A newspaper man who would not believe that it was so very difficult to get a drink in Kansas determined to investigate for himself. He took with him a friend who, it is stated, "could find liquor in back alleys, hay mows, and under kitchen doors." He relates their experiences in humorous detail in the Kansas City Star; tells how, after following the trail for ten hours and forty minutes in the city of Topeka they finally ran down an alley cocktail, and sums up the situation thus:

"Then it is possible to buy liquor in Topeka? Yes, and it is also possible to rob a bank there. It is a crime to sell liquor and it is also a crime to steal, and both crimes are committed in Topeka and probably will continue to be. But neither is committed easily or with impunity and neither is respectable. As to the degree of ease, I should say that robbing a bank would be a much simpler matter than buying an alley cocktail, and would involve less risk. A bank robber can get into Topeka without having to register his name and occupation with the authorities. Whiskey can't. Under the Mahin law the railroads are required to certify to the county attorney every shipment of liquor laid down in Topeka, the name of the consignee and his address. It makes a trail a blind man could follow, and the result is there is no liquor shipped into Topeka any more. What small quantity reaches there is carried in by its alley agents and hidden in out-of-the-way places to reappear in the manner I have described in the shape of alley cocktails.

"Which brings me to what I was going to say about that delectable drink. An alley cocktail is a half-pint of the cheapest whiskey obtainable in the barrel houses of Kansas City diluted with Kaw river water and artificially colored with burnt sugar. It is then buried under the chicken house and permitted to age over night. When you meet a man on the train who boasts loudly that the lid is off in Kansas and that he can go to Topeka or Leavenworth or Wichita and buy a drink, it means he has had an alley cocktail. When he has had two he will boast that he beats his mother."

AN UNPARALLELED RECORD.

The following dispatch was sent out from Washington, D. C., one Monday soon after the new excise law went into effect: "The national capital awakened today to find that during the thirty-one hours from midnight Saturday to 7 o'clock this morning it had been a 'jagless' town. Not one arrest for drunkenness had been made by the police in that time, and the police court docket was a lonesome sight. The new and rigid excise law passed by congress was responsible for the wave of Sabbath purity."

"Where are the prisoners?" demanded Police Judge Pugh when he ascended the bench and cast his eye around for the usual Monday morning array.

"There ain't none, yer honor," said the bailiff, almost sadly. "We ain't got so much as a plain drunk."

"The record, so far as the police have been able to ascertain, is unparalleled in the annals of the department."

WASHINGTON, D. C. GOING DRY.

The new excise law of the District of Columbia, which went into effect July 1, will in 16 months from that time have abolished one-half of the drinking places of the capital city. Among its provisions are: A dry zone of 400 feet around every public school, college and university, and round every church; a dry zone of 1,000 feet round the marine barracks, navy yard, war college, and engineer barracks; absolutely dry Sundays; not more than three saloons, other than hotels or clubs, on one side of a block, nor more than four on both sides; liquor in residence districts sold only in sealed packages; all saloons closed on inauguration day. The total number of saloons, including bars in hotels and clubs, must be reduced to 300 by November 1, 1914.

POSITIVELY HARMFUL.

English and German physiologists have demonstrated beyond a question that the continued use of alcohol in any quantity is not only useless, but positively harmful, and on the basis of experience I appeal to my colleagues everywhere to abjure its use. The fittest use a doctor can make of alcohol is to preserve dead tissues, cancers and the like, and to dehydrate sections of tissue for the microscope.

It may be classed as a drug and a poison, and has no rightful position as a medicine.—Dr. Howard A. Kelly.

IN SAME CLASS.

The four words, Damp, Dark, Dirty, Drink, always go together. We have looked upon dampness, dirtiness, darkness as preventable causes of disease. Why not consider drink in the same light?—Mrs. Ella A. Boole, President New York State W. C. T. U.
